The Ranieri House, adjacent to the Leeds Church yard is a two and one half story stone house, three bays long and one room deep. The south facade is dressed stone with large corner stones, like quoins. Above the openings are segmental brick arches, an unusual feature in this area. The chimney on each gable is constructed of brick above the roof line. The paneled door is located in center of the facade. Sash is 2/2. Two "A" roof dormers of victorian design are on the south pitch of the "A" roof. A porch with turned balusters extends on the south and part of the east sides. Above the entrance steps is a pediment in the porch roof. A stone lean-to is attached to the north side of the house with an addition wing of concrete off the lean-to. The old town of Leeds is composed of only a handful full of houses, all kept in very trim order.
